FÖRBRYLLANDE

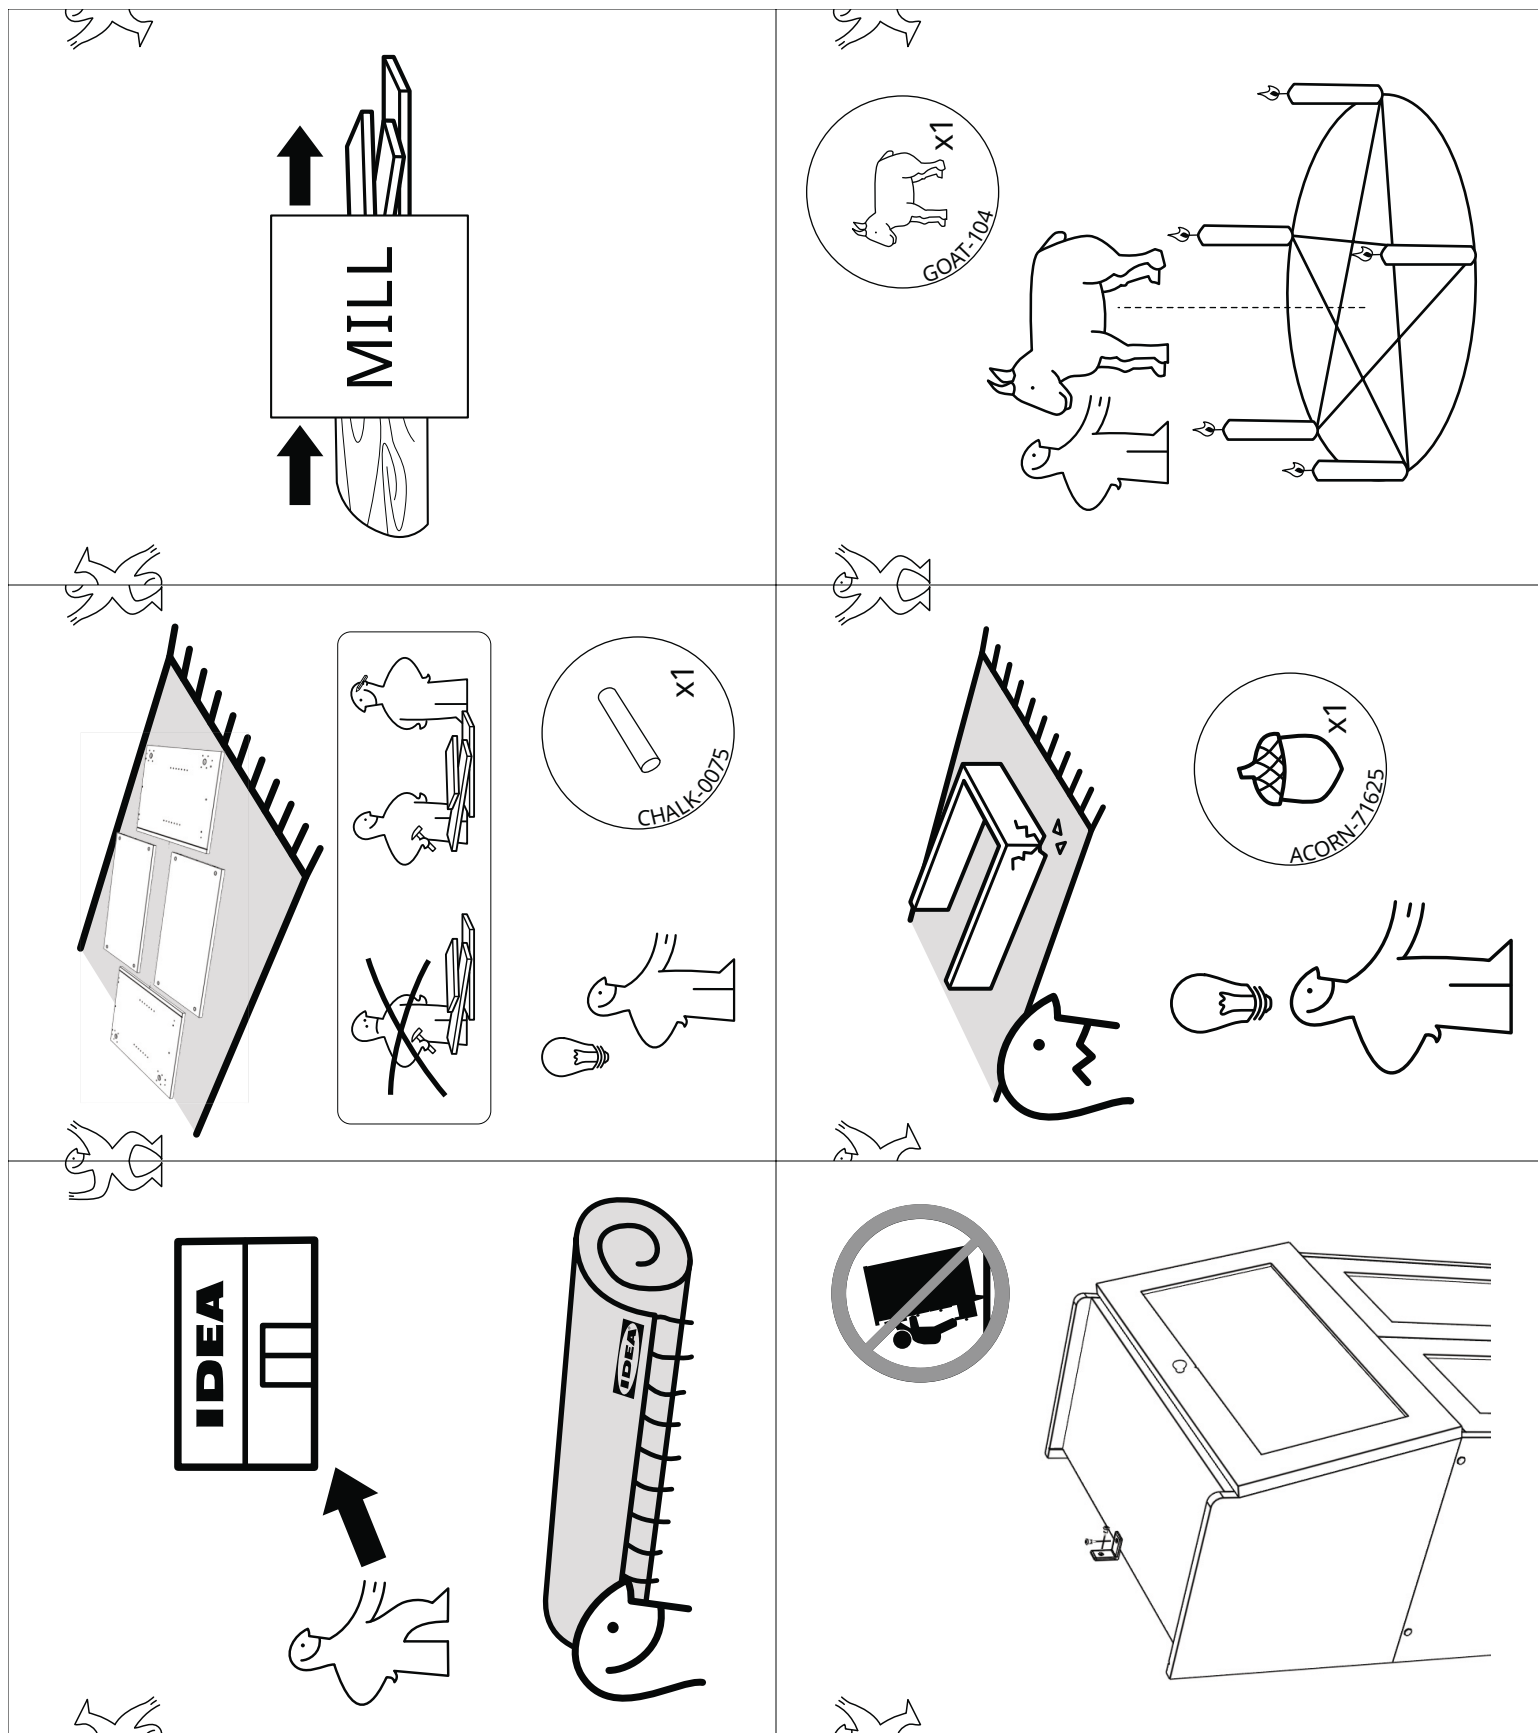

Engelsberg Ironworks date back to 1681, but the town of Ängelsberg has been smelting iron since the 12th century. The Swedes always leave meticulous instructions for building their wonders...but you accidentally dropped these pages in a pile.

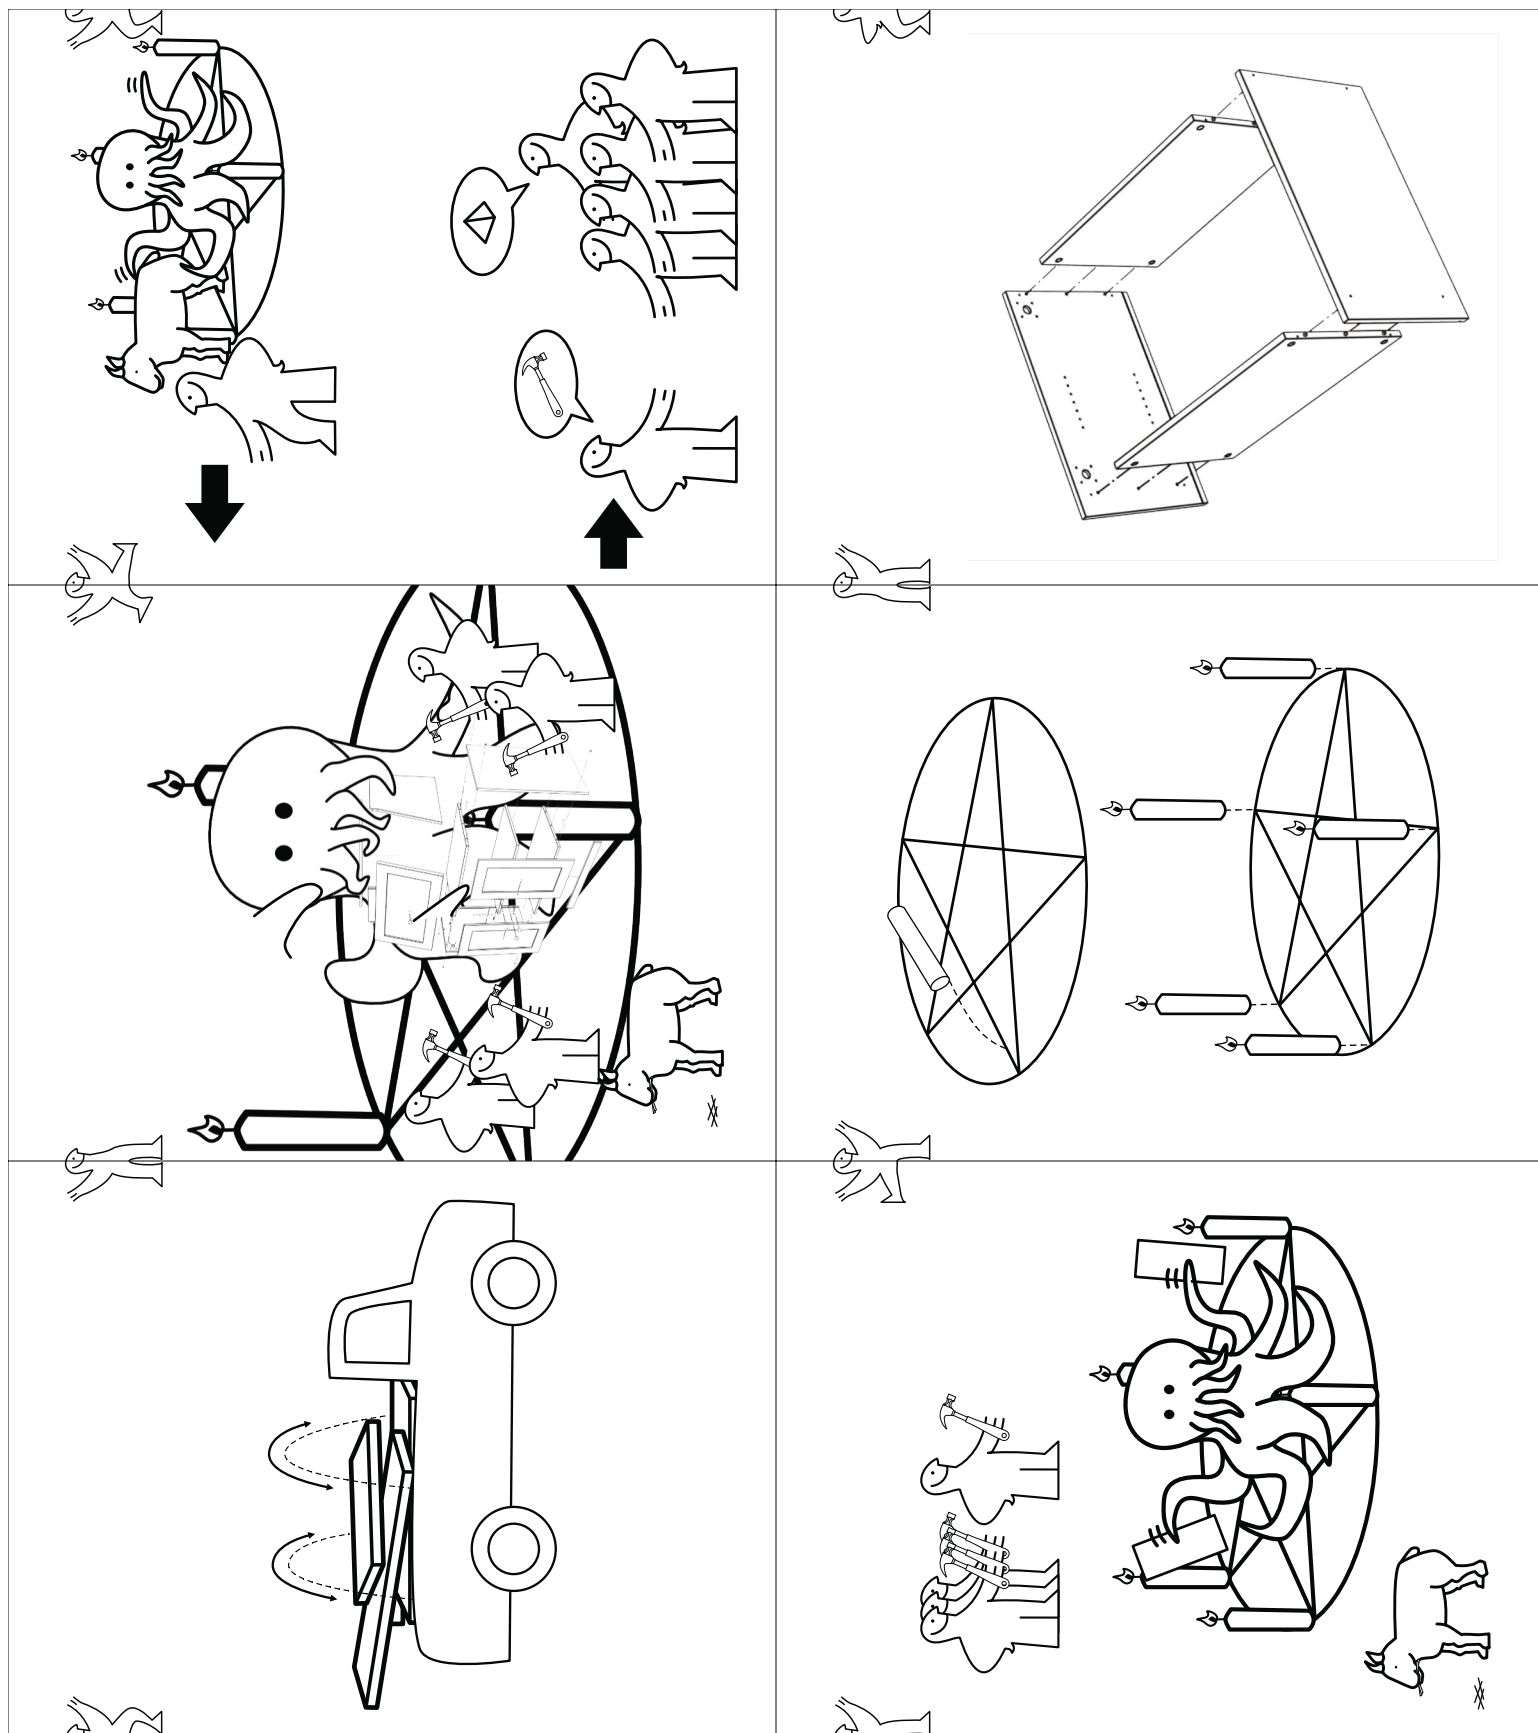

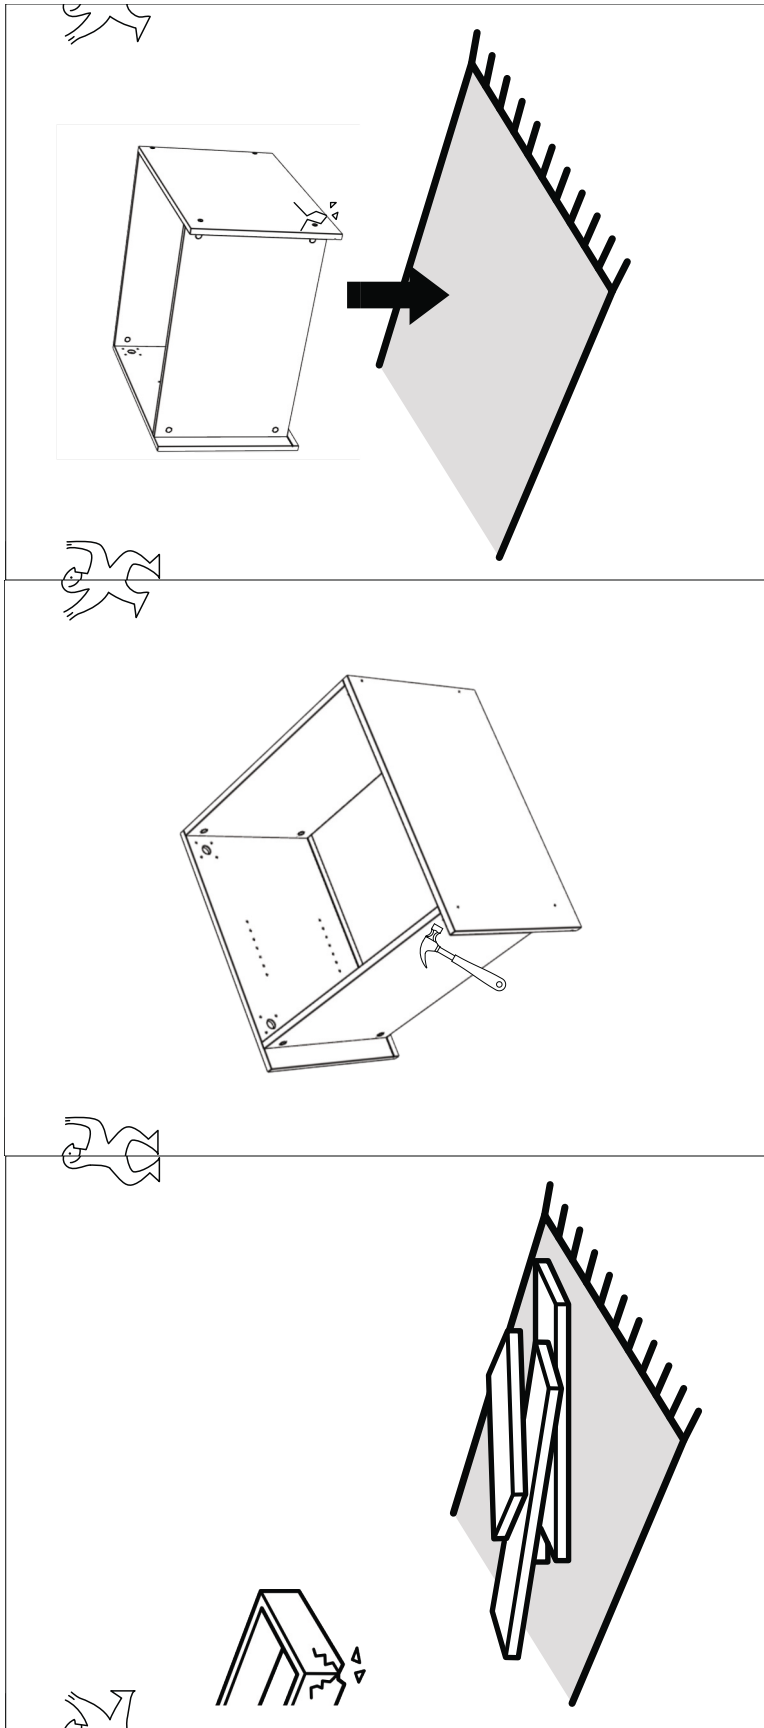

It is up to you whether to cut this out or not. Game Control should have a few pairs of scissors, if you didn't bring your own.

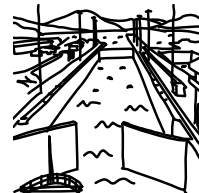

Panama

The man's plan has gone slightly wrong. He'd have been better off with this.

Birdwatching

We still don't know why the Nazca people drew these large geometric shapes, but it's clear that they took inspiration from the birds all around. Maybe if you keep an eye out you too can determine what the local wildlife is saying. There could be some sort of signal to flag for future reference.

This is a location puzzle. You may not be able to solve this without observing some local wildlife. You can find what you need around Dig Site BETA.

Turtle Geometry

We're pretty sure there were no pizza-obsessed turtles in the Cloaca Maxima, the early Roman sewers (which are still in use today!), but this turtle is stuck above ground. If you can find a thematically appropriate (and similarly ancient) entrance, you might be able to figure out how close the turtle's home is.

This is a location puzzle. You may not be able to solve this without finding the appropriate location. You can find what you need near Dig Site BETA.

1 ; Rules of turtle geometry:
2 ; - Turtle can not fly and must remain on solid ground
3 ; - Turtle always stays on the grid; no stopping where there is no intersection
4 ; - Turtle counts distances based on what it sees on its left
5 ; - Turtle's HOME is immediately next to the water, pointing towards a road or path

X Marks the Spot

The ancient Romans had plenty of advanced technology, including an extensive network of roads. Find the appropriate spot to search for some ancient relics, and perhaps you'll learn how they kept the roads so clean.

This is a location puzzle. You may not be able to solve this if you move on to another location. You can find the ancient relics near Dig Site BETA.

Standard rules for nonogram (also known as picross or paint-by-numbers) puzzles apply.
